

It looks like you haven't yet experienced a Crucible Moment.

These experiences — events that are so painful they fundamentally change the trajectory of our lives — are hard to avoid. It is important to understand what they are and how to prepare for them if and when you experience a crucible moment. Please see the resources below to better understand what a Crucible Moment is and how to move forward from one.

Low Design, Low Vision, Low Reality

You are at the start of your journey into living a life of significance. Congratulations! Showing up here and answering these questions is a step in the right direction. It looks like you could use more clarity in all three areas of Design, Vision, and Reality. You may feel like you are on autopilot some days, or that life is happening TO you, versus you taking the reins for yourself. You may not understand why you do the things you do, or why you feel the things you feel. You may feel like your life lacks clear purpose and that the life you are living is not one you chose for yourself. This is a ripe opportunity to delve into discovering who you really are and do the work to understand the way you are wired, the purpose you would feel the most fulfilled executing, and the reality you want to build for yourself.

The place to start is understanding your Design. Once you better understand how you are wired, you are able to build from it, to cast a vision in line with who you are, and bring it to reality to lead a life of significance. You can start with a personality test to see, at a high level, how you are wired. You can experiment with a few different avenues that speak to you to see what you feel best doing and what comes most naturally. Ask family and friends about what they might feel you are best at. Reflect on your successes and setbacks. Once you have a clearer understanding of who you are and how you are wired, you can take the next step and crystallize the Vision that you're passionate about bringing into Reality.
