

It looks like you've experienced a Crucible Moment, but you are not yet ready to approach it as an opportunity.

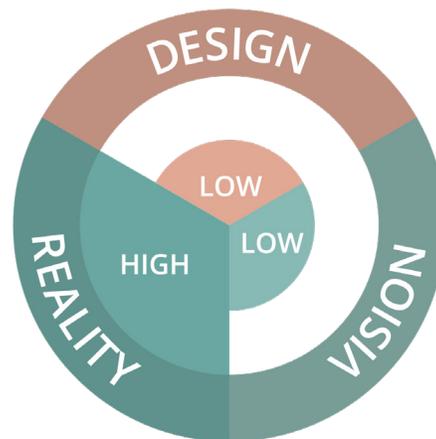

From painful and difficult experiences can come great strength and potential; we can either wallow in our trials or use them to build a life of significance. If you're feeling stuck in your negative experiences, it's time to reflect — what did you learn from this experience? What did it teach you about yourself — about what you want and don't want? Once you are ready to shift from obstacle to opportunity, you can dive into how you are designed, discover your life's purpose and vision, and bring your vision to reality. Continue reading to see how you scored on these dimensions, and which areas to focus your energy on first.

Low Design, Low Vision, High Reality

You are a doer and comfortable with taking action. You may be living on autopilot and feel you are satisfied with the life you are currently living. Though you enjoy getting things done, you may not be on the path of your true purpose, your calling, or what is in alignment with who you really are and what you were born to do. We may have other people, friends, and family, who impact our direction. You may feel unfulfilled, like the effort you put forth does not align with what your soul is called to do.

It's time to uncover your Design. If you want to live a life of significance rather than just busyness, take the first step to understand how you are designed. Your results may be different than the "doing" you've been executing, so stay open to changing course.

Once you understand how you are wired, you will be able to build from it, to cast a vision in line with who you are, and bring it to reality to lead a life of significance. You can start with a personality test to see, at a high level, how you are wired. You can experiment with a few different avenues that speak to you to see what you feel best doing and what comes most naturally. Ask family and friends about what they might envision you best doing. Reflect on your successes and failures — what parts of your person contributed to each? Once you have a clearer understanding of who you are and how you are wired, you can take the next step and crystallize your Vision to bring to Reality, in line with who you are.
